AWFUL CATASTROPHE BOYERTOWN THEATER

of Pottstown, nine miles distant, was summoned. The firemen from Pottstown found the situation very bad and went to work with a vim to stay the progress of the flames. This was accomplished after the building had been entirely destroyed and several adjoining structures badly damaged.

While the flames were being checked some of the Boyertown firemen and others assisting them, made frequent trips to nearby saloons, with the result that toward morning some of the men became unruly. There were frequent fights among themselves. At one time it looked as though the entire town fire companies would become involved in a free fight. Only the good work of the state police who had been summoned from the barracks at Reading to assist the town, saved a more serious affray.

The condition became so serious that Burgess Kohler at 3 a. m. issued an order that all saloon keepers within the borough should close. This order was promptly complied with and the saloons will remain closed until further notice.

When the flames were extinguished and the rescuers entered the building a horrible sight met their gaze. Bodies were piled in one solid mass six feet high on the second floor, so solidly wedged that pickaxes and crowbars had to be used to separate the victims. As each victim was taken from the pile a number tag was attached and the body placed on boards. The bodies were covered with quilts and lowered to the street by means of ladders, and they were placed in wagons and taken to one of the four morgues. So rapidly were the bodies removed that wagons were not always at hand and the dead were carried through the streets to the morgues. Dr. J. H. Davis of Malvern, who supervised the removal of the bodies on behalf of the coroner, said he did not believe that ten per cent of the victims would ever be identified. In nearly every case the upper portions of the bodies were burned away. In a great many instances the lower parts of the bodies were not touched.

Richard Allen of Alhambra, a well known democratic politician of this county, came to town yesterday and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. May Melaney, a neighbor, on the charge of poisoning a fox terrier belonging to him. He brought with him as an exhibit a piece of steak on which the dog had fed. It was covered with a white crystallized powder thought to be strychnine.

Allen saw the meat thrown in front of his house by a woman on horseback. That is, he saw her ride out on her way, and throw something, but he did not notice at the time who she was, or precisely what she was doing, but the next morning the dog was dead, and then Mr. Allen made an investigation and found the meat. Pursuing his investigation further, he found a person who had met a woman on horseback just below his house at that time, and that woman was Mrs. Melaney.

He had not then fully made up his mind to proceed against her, but soon after a relative of hers made some inquiry about the dog. That was the last straw on the camel's back and Mr. Allen came to town to begin proceedings. He said that he did not desire that she should be severely punished, but he wanted to break up this business of poisoning dogs.

He swore out a warrant in Justice Johnston's court. It will be served today.

BIG GATES FOR THE SLUICING TUNNEL

A Description That Gives an Idea of the Magnitude of This Single Feature of the Storage Project.

The following from the Los Angeles Times gives considerable information concerning the details of the construction of the big gates in the sluicing tunnel at Roosevelt, that are soon to be placed.

A crew of Los Angeles workmen will leave here within a week to perform one of the most important tasks in connection with the great Tonto Basin dam, near Roosevelt, Arizona, through which several hundred thousand arid acres are to be reclaimed under one of the biggest of the federal irrigation projects. They are to place in position the ponderous gates that were manufactured in Los Angeles by the Llewellyn Iron Works, at a cost of $200,000 to the government, and are the main mechanical features of the stupendous project.

Work on the dam has progressed to a stage that permits of the installation of the gates through which the local concern will fulfill its contract with the government, an undertaking which fell to it in competition with some of the largest factories in the country.

At almost the last minute, the government had the misfortune to smash one of the costly parts of the equipment, an immense bronze casting, and this is being replaced at great cost at the Los Angeles foundry. Fortunately for the local manufacturers, the accident occurred after the casting had been delivered to the government and the loss will fall on the United States.

Six Great Gates. The gates, of which there are six, are to be used in a great sluicing tunnel at the side of the dam—a water passage that is 16x12 feet in size for most of its length, widening out into a roomy chamber at the point where the gates are to be installed.

There are two sets of three gates each, and each gate has an opening measuring 4 1/2x10 feet. One set will be known as the service gates and will be in constant use, except when repairs may be needed; then the other set, provided for emergencies, will come into play.

Each of the six gates weighs ten tons. There are more than 400 tons of material in all. Seventy tons of which is used in the working faces of the gates, this provision being required because of the large proportion of salt carried by the water, which would cause corrosion of the iron if that material alone were to be used.

It is in the casting of the bronze work that Los Angeles comes in for a good deal of distinction, because these are the largest bronze castings ever made on the Pacific coast. It simply shows that the city is getting up toward the top in the manufacturing line.

The gates are of what is known to engineers as the Stoney type. They will operate under the heaviest pressure of any of the same type in use in the world. There will be a depth of 230 feet of water above the gates—a tremendous pressure. The gates will be operated by hydraulic cylinders and will be easy of manipulation.

It will take probably sixty days to install the gates, when the Llewellyn works will receive the last payment on its contract. The work will be in charge of Walter Taylor, vice president of the local concern, and will be under the supervision of the United States engineers at the head of the big project.

The Tonto Basin dam is at the junction of the Salt river and Tonto Creek, and near it is the town of Roosevelt, which came into being with the start of work on the dam, and which will be wiped out entirely when the great reservoir is completed. There is a big cement plant at that point, built to supply material for use in building the dam; otherwise, because of the remoteness of the spot, the government would have had to pay something like $7 a barrel for cement.

Hard Fighting Task. It was a good deal of a task to get the 400 tons of material for the gates from Los Angeles to the dam. Roosevelt is seventy miles from Mesa, a railroad station on the Southern Pacific, fifteen miles beyond Phoenix. From Mesa all the material was hauled by government wagon trains to the damsite, the manufacturers simply delivering their product at the railroad station. Many wagons broke down under the load of the heavy castings, but this was a matter of no local concern.

A Visiting Party of Stockholders Is Here And Inspect the Mine.

The stockholders of the Fortuna Gold and Copper company held a meeting yesterday at which general business of interest in the future conduct of the mine was transacted and a board of directors chosen. J. N. Sturdy of Pittsburgh was elected president of the company. He is one of the leading stockholders. F. B. Bithell of Pittsburgh was chosen vice president and general manager. He will remain here and take charge of the operations on the property. Frank H. Kinnis of Buffalo was elected secretary. William Williams of Phoenix and Major Whitney of Olean, New York, members of the board of directors.

Monday was devoted to a trip of inspection to the Fortuna mine, the visiting party arriving here Sunday evening on a special train over the M. & P. The property is located near the old Union mine north of this city and when more active operations are begun, it will be the nearest producing property to this city, which naturally makes its future more or less of special interest here.

Mr. Sturdy, the new president had little to say last night on the future plans. On being asked concerning the financial situation in Pittsburgh he said it was very much improved and things were getting straightened out satisfactorily. At one time about 50,000 men were laid off in that city which is an industrial center, but most of them had

THE CALENDAR CALLED IN THE SUPREME COURT

Among Cases Set for Hearing the Local Option Matter for January 22.

At yesterday's session of the supreme court, the calendar was called and cases were set. Several motions were finally disposed of and candidates were admitted to practice. Among the cases set for hearing was that of Joseph Thalheimer against the board of supervisors of Maricopa county to restrain the appellees from calling a local option election. The hearing will take place on January 22. On the same date will be heard the case of W. C. Greene and the Greene Cattle company against Frank H. Hereford, appealed from Santa Cruz county.

The case of R. E. Daggs, appellant, against the territory respondent, will be heard on Jan. 17. The hearing of the case of S. J. Tribble, appellant, against the United States, one of the so-called trust cases, was set for Jan. 15. In the case of Louis V. Eytting serving a life sentence for the murder of John Leitch, Judge Baker attorney for the appellant, was given until October to file a brief.

In the case of Tommasa Frank, administratrix of the estate of Abe Frank against the Southern Pacific the appeal was dismissed. This was a damage suit growing out of the occupation of the land belonging to Frank.

In the case of James H. Work against the United Mines company of Globe, a motion to dismiss writ of error was granted. An appeal was dismissed in the matter of the Calumet Consolidated Copper company against J. R. Morse and others. An appeal was also dismissed in the case of W. T. Smith and others, appellants, against Alexander B. Titus, appellee from this county, the judgment of the lower court having been satisfied.

been put back to work. The contraction in manufacturing activities was due solely to money stringency and not to overproduction or lack of orders ahead, so that as soon as the money situation was relieved things resumed their former prosperous state as fast as might be expected.

Pittsburg payroll is over one million dollars a day so that the scarcity of cash was quickly made apparent there, laborers not being ready to accept scrip in many cases. Mr. Sturdy related one incident wherein a depositor determined to withdraw his money found himself out in the cold. His bank finally acceded to his persistent demands and he took his money, went over to another bank to deposit it, but to his astonishment not a bank in Pittsburg would accept it.
